

06 November

Theresa May's ministers took the first steps to delivering their promise to make the U.K a global trading nation after Brexit, setting out customs and trade laws that will come into force when the country quits the European Union.

While bitcoin might hit $8,000, Goldman Sachs Group Inc. analysts say that could be the last big number we see for a while.

South African Airways will revive a plan to seek an equity partner that's able to provide cash and operational savings to help turn around the state airline, according to its new chief executive officer.

President Donald Trump departed Tokyo on Tuesday morning for a two-day visit to South Korea, bringing him near North Korean leader Kim Jong Un on a stop that will also feature talks on a trade deal he says hurts U.S. workers.

07 November

Catalan separatists failed to heal their divisions in time to establish a common front for December's election, boosting Spain's chances of restoring some normality to the rebel region.

The frenzy in the copper market is luring traders to take high-flying bets that prices are headed back toward a record.

Saudi Arabia's wealth fund, which aims to control more than $2 trillion by 2030, is working with rainmaker Michael Klein and boutique Evercore Inc. to advise on its global investment strategy and financing plans, according to people familiar with the matter.

President Donald Trump issued a call to all nations to deny aid and assistance to North Korea as a way to choke off the rogue regime, saying it was a matter of conscience for the world to stand together against the nuclear threat.

08 November

Brexit talks resume Thursday with no indication that a breakthrough is in reach: While both sides are hoping for an agreement by the end of the year, the Europeans are striking a cautious tone.

Bank of England policy maker Ian McCafferty said clarity on Brexit will be needed early next year to prevent banks starting to shift jobs out of the country.

Market reaction to Saudi Arabia's stunning anti-corruption raid has been a boon to some billionaires and a curse to others.

Having listened to President Donald Trump's 'America First' rhetoric and his hammering of the need to reduce U.S. trade deficits, what many Chinese executives say they hear is not the threat of a trade war, but the words of a dealmaker who'll be good for business.

09 November

Spain's central government is pushing for the release of eight former officials from the Catalan government and expects to see them freed in time to campaign in next month's election, according to a person familiar with the matter.

Britain faces a fundamental choice between Donald Trump's vision of a low-regulated, business-friendly society or the "European model" of higher food and environmental standards, the European Union's chief Brexit negotiator, Michel Barnier said.

Two of New York's most significant construction projects -- Manhattan West, where Amazon.com Inc. will have offices, and One Vanderbilt, destined to be among the city's tallest buildings -- are both ensnared by a $76 million labor dispute.

Pacific nations are yet to agree on how to salvage a blockbuster trade pact after days of talks in Vietnam, with Australia confident of an outcome but Canada warning it wants a good deal over a fast one.

10 November

Embattled U.K. Prime Minister Theresa May faced a fresh challenge as the Sunday Times said 40 Conservative members of Parliament, nearly enough to trigger action, have agreed to sign a letter of no confidence in her.

If time is money, big M&A is getting a lot costlier in the European Union thanks to a tactic increasingly deployed by the bloc's merger watchdogs in Brussels.

Saudi Arabia, the world's largest crude exporter, will raise security at its oil facilities after Bahrain blamed Iran for a fire at a pipeline that connects the two Arab allies. Iran denied that it was involved.

As the world's two largest economies jockey for influence in Southeast Asia, one appears to be making more headway than the other.

